September Is "Arthritis Month"

To more than 1,000,000 Canadians pain and suffering due to arthritis is and the other rheumatic diseases, are a daily aspect of life. Too few people are aware of the heavy toll which these diseases take in both human misery and economic waste.

More than 265,000 Canadians are disabled by arthritis and rheumatism; 63,000 of these are totally and severely incapacitated. Last year, more than 9,000,000 work days were lost in Canada as a result of these diseases, at a cost of $100,000,000 in wages alone.

It is now possible to control some forms of arthritis. Many sufferers are able to live nearly normal lives.

As a result of effective and progressive research during the past few years, it has been demonstrated that such disability can be prevented in about four out of five patients. The keys are early diagnosis and use of modern treatment techniques.

This is the now hope for all who suffer from arthritis.

Arthritis research has been spearheaded by the Canadian Arthritis and Rheumatism Society, organized in 1949 to improve methods of treatment, and learn the cause and cure of the diseases.

As Minister of National Health and Welfare, I commend the work of the Society to everyone in Canada, and urge all Canadians—particularly during this "Arthritis Month"—to support its important efforts to combat and curb this distressing affliction.

Forest Products Week Sept. 17 to 23

OTTAWA — This Centennial Year, when all Canadians are particularly occupied with recognizing our nation's great heritage and potential, is also a fitting occasion upon which to acknowledge the spectacular development of our forest products industries and their importance as a cornerstone of the national economy.

Today forest products industries provide employment for more than 11 per cent of all Canadians at work in manufacturing. They are the source of better than five per cent of all salaries and wages paid in Canada. And in dollar value they account for some 22 per cent of our export trade.

Thus, it is understandable that the forest economy is considered the most important of all those based on our abundant national resources, and that we look to it for even more significant contributions throughout our second century.

During National Forest Products Week I am certain that all Canadians join me in paying tribute to those who are developing this vital group of industries.

Merit Award Presented

Hon. Russell A. Patrick, Minister for Tourism, has announced that an award of considerable significance to the research and tourist industry has been made to the province of Alberta.

The Western Council of Travel Research Inc., at its 9th annual conference in Reno, Nevada, in August, 1967, presented the Alberta Department of Industry and Development with an Award of Merit for excellence in survey design, research procedures and analysis, and for utilization of standardized definitions in its 'Survey and Analysis of Non-resident Travel, 1966'.

Details and copies of the survey may be obtained by contacting Mr. R. W. Thomson, Research Officer, Alberta Government Travel Bureau, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

Specks In The Eye

A First Aid Tip From St. John Ambulance

Removing a speck of sand or grit from someone's eye can be tricky business, and should be handled very carefully, warns St. John Ambulance, the Canadian First Aid authority.

To remove specks, adults should grasp the lashes of the affected eye pulling the upper lid outwards and downwards over the lower eyelid, then letting go. If the patient is a child, this should be done for him.

If this fails, seat the patient facing a good light, place your thumb near the edge of the lower lid and pull downward while he looks up. If the speck can be seen remove it gently with the corner of a clean handkerchief or a wisp of clean gauze. If these methods fail, cover the eye with a pad of clean gauze, and take the patient to a doctor.

As the eyeball is very susceptible to damaging scratches, extreme care should be taken. Never, under any circumstances, try to remove anything which appears to be stuck in or on the eye. This could cause irreparable damage.

Pickling—Vinegar and salt are the preservatives used in pickling. You will find four types of vinegar on your supermarket shelves:

Cider—the best for pickling. Its flavor is excellent and it is highly aromatic. However, it tends to discolor white or light colored vegetables.

White Pickling—has less flavor but gives better color where foods such as onions or cauliflower are used.

Malt—is dark colored and rich in flavor (especially good for chutneys).

Blended—is usually half white and half cider vinegar (it may contain some malt).

Dairy salt is preferable to table salt for pickling. Iodized salt can be used, but additives to make table salt free running will produce a cloudy brine or pickle mixture if the proportion of salt is high, e.g., dill pickles. It is salt that draws water from the vegetable tissues by the process of osmosis, making them crisp and firm. Salt also adds flavor, preserves and controls fermentation.

Spices should be bought fresh each year, used with caution and ALWAYS be measure level. Whole spices are your best choice. They should be tied loosely in a cheese cloth bag to allow the hot vinegar to circulate freely, cooked with the vinegar or pickle, and then removed. Prolonged cooking of whole spices or use of ground spices will darken your pickle.

Problems?—Shrivelling can be a result of several factors: was your vinegar too hot or too strong? Brine too strong? Too much sugar used? Stale products? — TOO MUCH ALUM! If using alum to preserve crispness, never use more than one teaspoon powdered alum to one quart of brine. Avoid using alum if possible.

Softening—perhaps your vinegar was too weak to prevent the growth of micro-organisms (bottled too long?), your brine too weak, storage place too warm, your pickles exposed above the brine or vinegar, or over-cooking or simply because you used stale products.

Change of color—use enamel, aluminum or stainless steel cookware when pickling. Vinegar and salt react with iron, copper and brass, causing discoloration. Too strong vinegar will bleach your pickles. Improper curing in brine may produce white blotches.

Slippery pickles—are a result of pickles being exposed above the brine solution or vinegar or having a brine that is too weak to prevent bacterial action.

Hollow pickles may be a result of using stale products or growth conditions, i.e., hot dry season. This well may be a hollow pickle year!
